Iraqi Military Claims 5 Ships, 3 Iran Jets Hit

By Judith Miller

CAIRO - Iraq has claimed that its forces destroyed five ships and shot down three Iranian F-14 jet fighters during a battle in the Gulf near the Strait of Hormuz. A military spokesman in Bagh-dad said Saturday that five "large naval targets" had been left in flames. He said three Iranian planes that had been protecting an enemy naval convoy" had fallen into the Gulf during the two-hour

There was no immediate comment from Iran, nor was there independent confirmation of the attack, Iraq said the action took place over the channel to Iran's main southern port, Bandar Khomeini, site of a large oil and chemical Diplomats said the attack would appear to underscore Iraq's determination to intensify efforts to impose a blockade on Iranian ports and oil installations.

Meanwhile, the official Polish press agency PAP said Saturday that a Polish cargo ship was hit Saturday morning by a mine at the mouth of the Red Sea. It was the 17th ship to be damaged by explosives in the Red Sea. The Jozef Wybicki, which was on its way to Saudi Arabia, was damaged in the engine room and brought to a standstill. There were no casualties, PAP said.

The Saturday attack reported by Iraq was the fourth Iraqi action this week. It was the first Iraqi attack on a convoy of merchant ships since July !. No independent ac-count was immediately available then, either, but shipping sources later confirmed that three vessels had been hit.

Iraq ended a one-month hill in attacks on Gulf shipping Tuesday, when its planes hit a loaded Liberian oil tanker south of Iran's main that it had attacked an oil platform off the Iranian coast. On Friday, a Baghdad military spokesman said Iraqi forces had hit a small ship in the part of the Gulf that Iraq has defined as a war zone.

Before these strikes. Western and Arab diplomats had speculated that the long pause in the Gulf shipping war might signal new hope for a negotiated end to the conflict between Iran and Iraq, which is in its 46th month.

Some Western diplomats had suggested that Iran and Iraq agreed to a halt in the shipping war as a signal of willingness to pursue a diplomatic solution to the war.

Butros Butros Ghali, Egypt's minister of state for foreign allairs, said Saturday on a visit to Beijing that China was the latest country to express support for an Egyptian initiative to end the conflict.

Western and Arab diplomats in Cairo said, however, that Iran appeared to have little interest in the Egyptian proposal or similar initiatives. Egypt, like most Arab states except Syria and Libya, has been supporting Iraq in the conflict.

U.S.-Saudi Arms Talks

Earlier, The New York Times reported from Washington:

The United States and Saudi Arabia have had informal talks about Saudi interest in buying large numbers of additional U.S.-made Sidewinder air-to-air missiles, according to a senior U.S. official.

[The State Department confirmed that such talks had taken place, Reuters reported Saturday.]

The U.S. official, who spoke Friday on the condition that he not be identified, said the Saudis had not made a formal request to purchase the AIM-9L Sidewinders, advanced missiles used by the U.S. Navy and Air Force. The weapon, developed especially for doglights, has a guidance system designed to permit attack from any angle.

NEW YORK — The New York Philharmonic has announced that it has canceled two concerts in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

The orchestra's action Friday followed protests from Jewish organizations and government offi-cials angered by the Philharmonic's capitulation to the anti-Jewish poli-cies of the Malaysian government. The Philharmonic agreed on Wednesday to a request by the Malaysians to delete a work from its Sept. 3 tour program, Ernest Bloch's "Schelomo, A Hebrew Rhapsody for Cello and Orches tra," because of the score's Jewish theme and origins. The orchestra was scheduled to play in Kuala Lumpur on Sept. 2 and 3.

Malaysia is a predominantly Moslem country, and Islam is its official state religion. Rais Yatim, Malaysia's minister of information, said last week that discouragement of the screening, portrayal or musi-cal presentation of works of Jewish origin was part of a government policy that had been "spelled out clearly," according to United Press

[Mr. Rais, in an interview published Sunday in The New Straits Times, said the orchestra's decision to cancel the visit "won't hurt anybody," Reviers reported. "It's entirely their decision whether to come or not to come," he said.]

TUNIS - Officially, President Habib Bourguiba's 81st birthday on Aug. 3 was a holiday; politically, it was an omen of Tunisia's uncertain future.

Although increasingly frail, Mr. Bourguiba retains a determination to remain at Tunisia's helm, where he has been since the country gained independence from France in 1956. Last fall, he said he hoped to rule Tunisia for 10 more years.

But Mr. Bourguiba, who is president-for-life, seldom speaks in public these days and when he does, his words are slurred. His frequent trips abroad for rest and medical treatment are also reminders of his

Split Widens Over Sikh Temple Feud

NEW DELHI — A split between rival Sikh factions has widened after about 75,000 Sikhs meeting in the holy city of Amritsar approved repairs to the Golden Temple, the religion's holiest shrine.

The meeting on Saturday, called by the Nihang sect, also approved a resolution excommunicating Gurcharan Singh Tora, head of a group of five high priests that manages Sikh temples in Punjab.

The high priests have themselves excommunicated the Nihang lead-er, Baba Santa Singh, and warned that all those attending the meeting would be excommunicated.

Meanwhile, authoritative sources said Mrs. Gandhi is considering constitutional changes to ex-tend direct rule of Punjab beyond the present 12-month limit. The predominantly Sikh state has been under direct rule from New Delhi since last October.

The sources said recent upper house elections gave her the twothirds parliamentary majority needed to make the changes.

As well as the five high priests, the main Sikh political party, the Akali Dal, also opposes the Ni-hangs. They say there should be no repairs until the army withdraws from the temple. Volunteers from the Nihang or-

Police arrested five persons on Saturday in connection with a bomb blast at Madras airport on Aug. 2 that killed 30 persons, Reuters reported from Madras, India. They were described as two Indian employees of Air Lanka, the Sri Lanka national airline; two Sri Lankan Tamils, one of them a former senior Colombo customs officer; and an Indian Tamil who is an airport policemen.

MANILA - Police fired shots and tear gas and turned water hoses on 1,500 stone-throwing demon-strators who tried to hold a rally without a police permit Sunday.

Reports put the total number of njured at between 10 to 15, most of whom were policemen. The official Philippine News Agency said that three demonstrators and at least 11 policemen were injured. It said that one of the policemen was burned by sulfuric acid.

Twenty-three people were taken in for questioning, including one with a bag of anti-government pamphlets and another with a megaphone to be used in the rally.

The crackdown reflects a tough-ening stance on the part of the Philippine authorities, who for the past month have been denying anti-government groups rally permits and using tear gas to force them to disperse.

The rally was one in a series preparing for Aug. 21, the first anniversary of the murder of an oppo-sition leader, Benigno S. Aquino Jr. His family and supporters hope to attract one million people to a raily in a Manila park on that date.

Free-Trade Zone In Space Is Urged

A group of members of Con-gress is looking toward space as the last frontier for free trade.

With the prospect of space in-dustries in sight, the lawmakers are proposing to bar tariffs and duties beyond the atmosphere.

Existing law treats space as if it were a foreign country, so products made in space by American companies could be subject to import tariffs when they were shipped to Earth. Similarly, companies working in space could be denied investment or research-and-development tax credits.

To ward off such threats to free enterprise, a dozen legisla-tors led by Representative Her-bert H. Bateman, a Virginia Re-publican, have submitted a bill specifying that articles made aboard American-owned spacecraft should be treated as domestic output.

Mr. Kahane, 52, who is soft-spoken in private but impassioned when he campaigns, called the re-action to his victory "an orchestrated campaign of sheer hatred and incitement in the name of liberal-tion, he says, is whether Israel is to be a secular, Western democracy where Jews and Arabs rule jointly or a Jewish theocracy, governed by Old Testament law, where Mos-lems and those of other faiths are welcome only as occasional guests.

Israel's founding Zionists tried to end that debate in 1948 with a proclamation of independence that granted full political rights to Arab itizens. But a high Arab birthrate and a leveling off of Jewish popula-tion growth, along with the seizure and his attempts to incite Jews of the West Bank and Gaza Strip in the 1967 war, raise the possibility of an eventual Arab majority. The only way to avoid that and permanently ensure Israel's surviv-al as a Jewish homeland, Mr. Kahane says, is to expel all of Israel's "I'm taking on people steeped in Western concepts who tell them-selves Judaism is really Thomas Jefferson or Burke or Rousseau when it's really nothing of the sort," he said. ### Germans in a Romance

All that backstage commotion in central Europe is now erupting into a once unimaginable spat between Soviet and German Communists. The East Germans, having dutifully sacrificed a pot of gold medals at Los Angeles, refuse to humor the Russians again by also passing up gold loans from West Germany. And, despite fierce Soviet pressure, Erich Honecker is holding to his plan to be the first East German leader to visit Bonn, next month.

Gold may be the least of it. There is a larger flirtation between the Germanys, even though both know that remarriage is impossible. Contrary to most calculations in Washington and Moscow, the Germanys are straining to bridge the gulf that history has dug between them.

Hitler's thunderous quest for Lebensraum (more living space) is what brought Germany to ruin and left it, and Europe, divided into Communist and democratic zones. Most non-Germans have since figured that these divisions are permanent and stable. But Germans, East and West, now talk passionately about Spielraum — more room for maneuver between the powers who divided their country.

West Germany, having paid its NATO dues by admitting new U.S. missiles, is scurrying to lavish credits on East Germany and form new links that could survive if not dispel the Soviet-U.S. storms overhead. This West German yearning for an Ostpolitik aimed at détente is hardly new; it was invented by Willy Brandt's Social Democrats, some of whom would now pursue it clear out of NATO. What is new is the enthusiasm for Ostpolitik among West Germany's pro-NATO conservatives. They are discovering national emotions even deeper than a desire for profitable East-West trade.

Still more startling is the reciprocal enthusiasm of East German Communists. After warning of an "ice age" if the NATO missiles were planted on their frontier, they have been most unglacial. Indeed, they have muttered objections to the Soviet missiles on their soil and are welcoming détente even as Soviet propaganda paints West Germany as daily more satanic.

Mr. Honecker has packed carefully for the trip West. He has a new $300-million credit from West German banks that the Russians call dangerous honey. He has promised to let thousands of East Germans follow the 30,000 who have been allowed to move West this year. He is letting more West Germans visit relatives in the East. He has permitted cables to bring in clear reception of West German television for the East German regions that felt left out of the nightly broadcast reunion.

All in all, East German officials are unmistakably proud of Moscow's denunciations of their "independence." And if Mr. Honecker makes his defiant trip to Bonn, he will gain stature also in Hungary and Romania, which have been cheering him on.

West Germany, meanwhile, is unashamed of the red carpet it has prepared for him. Chancellor Helmut Kohl has been reading up on his guest's youth in the Saar region and claims to be impressed by the nationalism that moderated Communism even then. Franz-Josef Stranss, Bavaria's erstwhile cold warrior, has bestowed his blessing after a tour of the East with a case full of credit offers. It is easy to make too much of all this, but dangerous to make too little. The Germans hunger to feel united even if they must live apart. By purging the dream, or nightmare, of reunification," they think they have found the way to maneuver around the superpowers. These stirrings could be seen as the final steps of accommodation to a bitter defeat. More likely, they are the first faint steps toward the unknown by people who think it was their fathers, not they, who lost World War II.

Yes, the Nuclear Arms Race Is Everybody's Business

WASHINGTON — The Soviet Union and the United States do not see eye to eye on questions of nuclear disarmament, but they tend to agree on one thing: The issue involves their national security and nobody else's. However, six prominent leaders of countries that do not possess these weapons have staked out the claim of nonnuclear nations for a say in arms control.

"The people we represent are no less threatened by nuclear war than the citizens of the nuclear weapons states," they said in a state-ment that received little attention when it was issued in May. "It is primarily the responsibility of the nuclear weapons states to prevent a nuclear catastrophe, but this problem is too important to be left to those states alone."

The six leaders — Argentina's Raul Al-ionsh, Greece's Andreas Papandreou, India's Indira Ghandi, Mexico's Mignel de la Madrid, Sweden's Olof Palme and Tanzania's Julius Nyerere — made an extraordinary ap-peal for superpower action to break the nuclear deadlock. Their statement called for a halt to all testing, production and deployment of nuclear arms "as a necessary first step."

Representing five continents, the politically diverse signatories are much more than simple petitioners, since they carry a large weight of opinion and responsibility with them. The initiative was originated by Parlia-mentarians for World Order, whose members are some 600 legislators in 33 countries.

The leaders contend that the superpowers are not dealing with security questions in ways that make the rest of the world feel safe. The superpowers may not be listening, but initiatives from nonnuclear powers testify to the fear and frustration that is felt so widely.

The clear message is that the nuclear crisis is global and demands global resolution. It does not call for unilateral disarmament or capitulation. It does present the superpowers with the imperative to move beyond narrow nationalism and cooperate with smaller comtries in building a common security system. The six-nation appeal could be an impor-tant advance in human history if it somehow persuades the nuclear powers to end their paralysis in negotiations. Given the fact that the superpowers do not usually welcome advice from smaller countries on how to handle their affairs, the responses in Washington and Moscow were not unreceptive.

The State Department said it "respects the sincerity of purpose and commitment to peace" of the six leaders. The Soviet agency Tass said Moscow is "prepared to cooperate in this matter with all who want to promote a genuine reduction of tensions."

Why should third parties not put forward specific initiatives, as well as general statements of concern? The control of nuclear weapons is hardly the exclusive concern of the United States and the Soviet Union. It is plainly a matter of common security rather than anyone's national security alone.

This is so obvious that it is all too often forgotten. The unfortunate reality of the nuclear age is that the modern nation-state can no longer guarantee security. No nation can defend itself against destruction. The button that determines whether its people live or die is located in some other country.

As things now stand, each superpower tends to place responsibility for the nuclear impasse on the other. The nonnuclear nations have a different perspective. They have as much to lose from a unclear war as the superpowers. Even if their territories were not destroyed by direct hits (as would almost certainly happen in Central Europe), a nuclear war would probably make the entire planet unlivable. At the very least, the economies of all countries would shrivel after the destruction of the industrial world; political systems as we know them would be likely to dissolve. Although the nonnuclear countries have failed to solve many of their own problems, they are not mired in static positions and idelogies where the arms race is concerned. Most important, they do not have domestic constituencies with powerful vested interests in maintaining the nuclear balance at its present precarious level. They are open to new possibilities and creative approaches in a way that the superpowers are not.

Last fall, then Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau of Canada sought to get beyond the stalemate by proposing, among other things, that the nuclear states come together at a summit and talk with each other in the framework of "10 points of common ground." The points include recognition that nuclear war is unwinnable, unacceptable and preventable, and that the nuclear powers must acknowledge the legitimate security interests of each.

This last acknowledgment is often missing at high levels of the U.S. government — and, presumably, in similar Soviet circles. At a recent private meeting at a Washington insti-tute, a senior U.S. arms control official was asked if the Soviets felt that their security was threatened by America. He answered that Soviet concerns about an alleged U.S. threat had no validity beyond propaganda

All of Mr. Trudeau's 10 points are rooted in common sense. They recognize that in the nuclear era everyone is in the same boat. Unfortunately, arguments over SS-20s and Pershing missiles tend to get bogged down in technical details and simply ignore the threat that ordinarily people can relate to.

The nuclear giants are generally condescending toward small-power meddling. But genume acceptance of principles such as Mr. Trudeau's could create the climate in which fruitful negotiations could begin.

Five years after its liberation from the butchery of Idi Amin, Uganda is again a killing ground. In recent months more than 100,000 people have been massacred or starved, according to reports that the U.S. State Department finds credible. Other diplomats assert that many Ugandans have died in camps served by international relief agencies, whose activities Uganda suspended last March. But no villainous tyrant is to blame. The blame fails on a feeble government unable to control its army and unwilling to ask for the outside help it so plainly needs.

Rather than admit failure to contain tribally based rebellion, President Milton Obote wants the world to believe nothing is amiss. But the reports alone caused him angrily to suspend the training of four of his officers in the United States and to cancel a visit by a U.S. military attaché. What is Mr. Obote hiding?

It is hard to understand the proposal by Elliott Abrams, the State Department's assistant secretary for human rights. He urges Congress to change the law that prevents using foreign aid funds to train security police. But would such a program help in Uganda, where the army is responsible for abuses that Mr. Abrams credibly denounces as "horrendous"? And isn't it the lack of U.S. complicity that enables him to speak out against the butchery?

Some interest rates have been declining a bit in the United States in recent weeks. The trend

continued through last week, which was interesting because the Treasury was selling very large quantities of securities to finance the federal debt. Simultaneously, the dollar, which has been very high on the foreign exchange markets all year, went higher than ever. Early in the week it set a couple of records - against the French franc, for one example. That did not draw much notice. Americans do not seem to be in the habit of following the exchange events, the interest rates that came down a little and the dollar that went up, and that connection is likely to exert a powerful influence over the American economy in the next year or two. An enormous flow of foreign money is now coming into the United States.

The overseas investors putting their money into U.S. Treasury bonds bid up the price of the dollar against their own currencies and then bid down the interest rate on the bond by competing with other buyers for it. That is why domestic interest rates and foreign exchange

key point is that this process is reversible.

1909: Aeroplanes for the U.S. Navy?

WASHINGTON - Rear-Admiral Cowles,

Chief of the Bureau of Equipment, has recommended to the Secretary of the Navy that the Department purchase two Wright aeroplanes to be used on battleships. Naval officers consider them valuable for use in range-finding and fire control. Admiral Cowles believes that it is high time that the Navy Department should embark in aeronautics. His idea is that the Wright brothers be asked to supply acroplanes and demonstrate their practicability aboard ship before any payments are made. The probable cost is $7,000 each. Aeronautical students are disappointed because the Secretary of War is sending no aviators to the Rheims [France] races or the Hamburg Aeronautical Conference on account of economy.

PHILIP M. FOISIE WALTER WELLS

ROBERT K. McCABE SAMUEL ABT

That is to Americans' advantage. But the rates are currently linked.

But there is a connection between these two rates. It is a subject left to the specialists.

In any case, Mr. Obote shows little inclination to seek foreign help to curb his troops. On becoming the first president of independent Uganda in 1962, he quarreled with the country's four tribal kingdoms, alienating the most important of them, the Baganda. He and a fellow socialist, Tanzania's Julius Nyerere, feuded with Kenya, thus nullifying the promise of an East African economic community. That paved the way for Idi Amin's coup in 1971, unleashing a slaughter that took perhaps 300,000 lives in a population of 12 million. Marshal Amin was chased from power in 1979 after he rashly provoked a Tanzanian invasion. A disputed election in 1980 made Mr. Obote president once again, still unreconciled with the Baganda and barely able to control the army. The anguishing result is a mess that other sovereign states may deplore but are impotent to ameliorate without actions that would infringe on Uganda's sovereignty - unless Mr. Obote asks for help.

If the extent of the calamity has been exaggerated, let Mr. Obote permit foreign observers to see for themselves. Absent that, the decent course for the human community, beginning with Uganda's immediate neighbors, is to condemn this cowering behind a national flag to conceal a new outbreak of barbarism. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Rights in Turkey: A Government on the Right Track

WASHINGTON — In my func-tion, I constantly encounter representatives of human rights groups whose feelings about human ights abuses in the world are manifest and at times moving. Too often, however, the depth of their analysis does not match the depth of their emotion - and the consequences can be harmful to human rights. On a trip to Turkey last month I saw a typical outcome of human rights activists' inability to combine the heat of moral passion with the light of intellectual insight: Not only Turkish generals and politicians but also many journalists and intellectuals have little sympathy for those Western human rights groups that claim to speak for them.

The unique historical, social and geopolitical conditions of a particular country are often simply ignored.

The writer is U.S. assistant secretary of state for human rights and humanitarian affairs. The most difficult problem - what will be effective in a particular case — is rarely addressed." In many cases, as in Turkey, this intellectual failure is matched by political failure. Not only have many human rights groups been snable to fashion policy recommendations that offer a prayer of being effective, but the people they claim to champion frequently resent the activists' shrill and uninformed criticisms. Understanding modern Turkey requires an appreciation of the historical achievement of Kemal Ataturk, who in 1923 created the Turkish Republic and laid down its philosophic foundation: secular civilian rule, an independent judiciary and parliamentary government. Turkey is the that there was a broad public consenonly country with an Islamic culture sus for the takeover. # Abrams on Turkey: His Outrage Is Selective

WASHINGTON - In recent W weeks Elliott Abrams has been a model of selective outrage. On June 27 he appeared before a conal subcommittee to speak of human rights in Cuba. "Conditions in Cuban political prisons are barbaric," he ud, "and include the use of torture." Two weeks later, on July 11, Mr. Abrams was in the American ambassador's residence in Ankara — in a country whose government, by its own figures, held 12,000 political prisoners in June 1982. But there will also be deeper consequences. In June 1983, Amnesty Interas Stephen Marris of the Institute for International had stated that "the Turkish national Economics pointed out the other day. government has permitted wide-The inflow of foreign money over the past two spread and systematic torture of its years has enabled American investment, and citizens throughout the 1980s." If those kisses on the cheek were now skewing it toward service industries, and a not loving enough to the torturers in Turkey, Mr. Abrams had another: falling dollar will push it back toward manufacturing - with a great waste of physical and human capital in the process.

Practical people usually dismiss the workings of the exchange markets as obscure and Candor compels us to state that some who criticize Turkey's human rights situation have no interest in human rights in Turkey or anywhere else: They simply use this issue as a weapon with which to attack a vital member of the Western alliance."

During an interview in his office the other day. Mr. Abrams dismissed Amnesty's assertions about the Turkish government's widespead and sys-tematic torture. That is "a misleading phrase," he charged. Amnesty is en-gaging in "false history." There was torture before 1980, he said, and a large amount of civil turmoil.

He was reminded that Amnesty. unlike himself, is not new to the hnman rights scene and in fact has been consistently pressuring Turkish regimes for two decades. It criticizes torture regardless of ideology, which is how it has won respect.

Mr. Abrams does not hesitate to speak forcefully against the Cuban government, but he thinks the delicate approach with a government like Turkey's is more effective. He offers no proof of his effectiveness. It is on the level of a personal you get too pushy or noisy — the way, he says, his predecessor, Patricia Derian, was - you may only offend the torturers, not change them.

Jacobo Timerman, tortured by the Argentine junta, spoke to this once, Cry out loudly, he insisted. "Some-times the politicians and the conservatives in the United States, they want to present a case saying that if we are outspoken we are not going to influence the generals in Argentina. That is not the point. The point is that you're going to scare them, you are going to save lives."

In certain parts of the diplomatic circuit, Mr. Abrams is well liked. A country like Turkey can have 12,000 political prisoners — a conservative count — and be hailed for "extraordinary progress." Other torturers, not only Turkey's generals, must now be asking themselves: If we can get praise like that, why release anyone?

when terrorists roamed the streets threatening every Turk's human rights. With the notable exception of Amnesty International, none said much about torture during the "progressive" reign of Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit. Most of the loud and public Western criticism of Turkey has taken place only since 1980.

Helsinki Watch, for example, predicted that the election of November 1983 would be a farce, claiming that the Motherland Party, which is hardly the favorite of the generals, would be forced into a coalition with one of the military's favored parties. When the Motherland Party won an over-whelming victory, Helsinki Watch then claimed, with bizarre logic, that the results demonstrated the Turkish people's lack of confidence in the urn to parliamentary democracy. Let there be no doubt: Turkey is a country with serious human rights ns. Martial law regulations limit freedom of the press, free speech and trade union activity. Conditions in Turkish prisons are often ntterly unacceptable by Western standards. Torture occurs with apparent regularity. These problems are not in dispute. The real issue is what causes such human rights violations and what will cure them.

Regarding martial law, Turkish journalists with whom I spoke resent-

The more serious problem is the police. Police forces are decentralized, very poorly trained and lacking in discipline. We would do well to consider helping the Turks raise the level of education and professional training of their police forces.

Unfortunately, the United States is precluded from helping in this effort by Vietnam-era legislation that pre-vents us from training foreign police forces. This section of the Force Assistance Act, hailed as a great buman rights advance, bars a sensible and active approach to the climination of human rights abuses by police. The Turks need help in this more than they need lectures.

Turkey is at a crossroads. Whether it remains an integral part of the West, committed to democracy and strategically allied with those nations that seek to defend freedom depends not only on Turks but also on the West. Turkey is not Sweden, nor should we expect it to be. The clamor of ill-informed and self-righteous critics does not help but hinders in the building of the modern, Western-oriented Turkey in which human rights will be fully guaranteed.

election campaign with a declara-tion that the Democrats are "going so far left, they've left America." I am concerned that the Republican Party is moving so far toward the New Right that it is abandoning its own best traditions.

Traditionally the party has stood for civil rights for minority members, equal rights for women and constitutional liberties for all Americans. Above all the Republican has opposed government en-croachment on individual rights.

The Republican tradition was defined by Abraham Lincoln in the struggles to preserve the Union and abolish slavery. It was refined by both the right and the left wings by conservatives such as William Howard Taft, Robert Taft and Barry Goldwater and liberals such as Theodore Roosevelt, Wendell Willkie and Nelson Rockefeller.

In the past the debate between liberal and conservative Republicans concentrated on the role of government in providing social services. Neither liberals nor conservatives challenged the party's historic commitment to constitutional libcrties for all and equal opportunities for blacks and women. Now the New Right has challenged these traditions - and claimed a divine mandate for doing so.

There is no stronger testimony to the abandonment of traditional Republican Party values than the possibility that Republicans will be swept out of office this year on a tidal wave of women's votes, including the votes of business and professional women. Lest we for- American Coalition for Traditional to The New York Times.

get, the Republican Party support-ed extending the right to vote to women. Passage of the 19th Amendment, which gave women the right to vote, ushered in the Republican era of the 1920s. Republicans once led the way on the Equal Rights Amendment but have now fallen by the wayside. The 1980 platform was the first in 40 years not to support it. If the party wants to close the "gender gap," it should put ERA back in the plat-form instead of puzzling over how to put down Geraldine Ferraro.

The party of Abraham Lincoln is also in danger of forgetting its roots on the issue of civil rights. The civil rights legislation of the 1950s and 1960s was overwhelmingly supported by congressional Republicans and enacted into law over the filibusters of Southern Democrats. I can still recall the eloquent defense of civil rights legislation by two Republicans from Lincoln's state. Everett Dirksen and John Anderson, Yet now those Republicans attempting to provide leadership on such issues as voting rights and tax exemptions for segregated private schools are condemned and even invited out of the party by Terry Dolan, the radical right-wing leader of the National Conservative

Political Action Committee, How far the party has strayed from its traditions is revealed in its unseemly embrace of the ultra-fundamentalist right wing, including the Moral Majority. Christian Voice and the recently organized

Much as these organizations love to talk about "traditional values," they threaten Americans' fundamental constitutional liberties, especially First Amendment guarantees of religious freedom and separation of church and state.

Apparently preferring theocracy to democracy, Tim LaHaye, chair-man of the American Coalition for Traditional Values, has said: "The problem with America is ... we do not have enough of God's ministers running our country."

clares that its positions on a host of political, social, economic and foreign policy issues are the only views that are "pro-Christian." According to these evangelists-turned-politicians, good Christians must support increased military spend-ing and oppose the Equal Rights Amendment, the National Science Foundation and the Department of Education. If you disagree, you are "anti-God" and "anti-family."

This moral McCarthyism threatens to suffocate free debate over the future of Republicanism. That is why it is so important for mainstream Republicans - liberals and conservatives alike - to speak up. Otherwise the party of Abraham Lincoln may be hijacked by Tim LaHaye and Terry Dolan.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

In Praise of Israel

Regarding the opinion excerp! com-ment "A Referendum Against Com-promise" (Aug. 2) by John Bulloch: To say that Rabbi Meir Kahane "typifies a new Israeli expansionist trend" is vastly misleading. Ninetynine percent of the voters in Israel's recent elections rejected Rabbi Kahane's Kach party. The fact that 1 percent of the vote entitles a man like Rabbi Kahane to a Knesset scat is no more than a hiccup in what is otherwise an equitable if impractical system of determining voter consensus. Contrary to the writer's conclusion, Israel still has a great deal in common with the Israel of 36 years ago. It continues to survive in hostile conditions that would have broken nations with lesser social ideals. If the political and economic climate periodically requires a re-examination of Israel's dedication to those founding ideals, it is not for the world to sneer if the results are indecisive.

He is committed to a policy of national reconciliation with his enemies, a policy he enacted once with generosity, yet the divisions between him and them seem deeper Robert Gabriel Mugabe was born on Feb. 21, 1924, the son of a carpenter in the village of Kutama, north of Harare. His Jesuit teachers recall him as earnest and attentive.

His quest for knowledge took him to South Africa and to Fort

Hare Academy, then a breeding ground of black nationalism, where he decided to become a politican. After teaching in several countries, he returned home in 1960 to enter politics as an aide to Mr. Nkomo. But he broke with him three years later, joining others from the majority Shona group who felt Mr. Nkomo to be too ready for negotiation instead of confrontation with the white authorities.

A year later, along with many others, including Mr. Nkomo, Mr. Mugabe was detained.

After his release in December 1974, Mr. Mugabe, elected to the leadership of his party by his colleagues in prison, campaigned to secure a hold on the divided grouping. He put down at least two major challenges during exile in Mozam-bique when he presided over a growing guerrilla army fighting white minority rule.

After peace talks in London, Mr. Mugabe won 57 of the 100 partiamentary seats in elections in early 1980. The victory enabled him to mount a relentless drive against his foes, principally the white leader, Ian Smith, and Mr. Nkomo, leader of the Ndebele minority.

Some Westerners count his alienation of the Ndebele-speaking people as the gravest blunder of his prime ministership. But others have seen it as inevitable in a continent where power is rarely shared.

"There is the old saying that there are no second prizes in African politics," a Western diplomat said. "Mugabe won the first prize, and that initial victory provides the mandate for him to hold onto it." Often, in the early days of his

19 Killed as Bomb Explodes at Sri Lankan Jail

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka - The bodies of 19 suspected Tamil separatists were reported recovered Sunday from the rubble of a police station in northern Sri Lanka devastated by a bomb explosion.

The bomb exploded Saturday when a group of Tamil militants went to the Chunnakam police station, nine miles (15 kilometers) outside Jaffna city, to try to free Tamil prisoners arrested in a government crackdown on insurgency that be-

The Ministry of Defense, in a statement, confirmed a report of the rebel attack in Jalina province, where Tamil separatist guerrillas are fighting for an independent nation. It said six members of the security forces were killed and a few were injured. The statement did not give further details.

Buthelezi Shows Southern Africa the Way

I am writing to object to the June 29 report "Zulu Picks Own Path in Fighting Apartheid." The whole of the civilized world is deeply con-erned about South Africa and those of us who know anything about it have been watching Chief Gatsha Buthelezi's career with interest. Of the black leaders who have emerged in that country, he holds out the most hope for us all for a peaceful and just solution to y for all. He has an immense folwing in black South Africa and immense fol-sis political constituency includes beople of all races.

But she was reinstated by a jury of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the clear implica-tion being that Budd did not intentionally interfere with Decker's progress. Regardless of her technical exoneration, the crowd at the Coliseum joined Decker in holding Budd responsible, and they booed the tiny, feathery girl throughout the race. Budd, whose left heel was cut open by Decker's spikes, ran the last few laps with tears in her eyes, knowing that Decker blamed her for Decker's fall from Standings grace. When the race was over and Budd approached Decker to express sympathy, Decker turned her away, saying, "Don't bother. I don't want to talk to you." Budd was seen crying as she left the track. The only poster hanging in Budd's her bedroom is of Decker, her idol. You can make the case that although Budd probably violated track etiquette by not giving P Decker a full stride's room to respond before sliding left, in front of her, Decker should have been prepared for such a high-school move. Budd is a complete novice in international competition. She isn't used to running in a tight so pack; she's used to taking the lead at her whim and breezing away with case. Discretion remains the better part of valor. For Decker to pull an Angel Cordero - storming by on the rail -so relatively early in the race was unnecessary and improdent. In any case, the now issue is moot.

Prices Lurch Up in Week But Retail Investors Abstain

By BOB HAGERTY

International Herald Tribuse ARIS - Eurobond prices lurched apward again last week, but most European investors do not yet appear ready to be panicked into heavy buying. Though prices on seasoned dollar bonds gained another 1 to 2½ points during the week, "the retail investor is not yet there in a big way," a Canadian banker observed Friday. He ascribed most of the buying to professionals building up inventories in expectation of higher retail demand after the August vacation period. Other bankers reported a trickling back of retail investors but no rush to

By the end of the week, even the professionals were turning cautious. "After such exuberant price rises over the last two weeks," White Weld Securities said in its weekly comment, "a modicum of caution may not go amiss now, and we would expect to see a peak in prices probably developing next

Professionals and investors alike are nervously looking for signs of lower shortterm interest rates. Many believe that a drop in shortterm rates is essential if the rally is to continue. On an annual basis, the yield on 30year U.S. Treasury bonds has fallen to about 12.50 percent from 13.20 percent over the past three weeks. During the same period, though, the rate on federal funds, which banks lend one another overnight, has held stubbornly at around 11.50 percent. Edward Dove, investment manager at Lazard Securities Ltd. in London, contending that the pace of U.S. economic growth and credit demand "are still pretty racy," said he believes short-term rates are likely to creep higher. Even so, he does not expect a sharp drop in the bond market anytime soon and used the setback in prices early last week to raise moderately his holdings

Complicating matters is the confusion over forthcoming Treasury regulations on bonds issued in the United States. These regulations relate to last month's removal of the 30-percent withholding tax on interest paid to foreign buyers of bonds issued in the United States. As widely expected, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan said last Thursday that the Treasury did not intend to sell bonds in bearer form, which would preserve the anonymity of buyers. Bearer Treasurys would appeal to some European investors, and thus push down the yield on Treasury issues in relation to Europonds. But several U.S. Congressmen objected to the potential for tax evasion provided by the bearer

TILL unclear is whether the Treasury will allow U.S. issues of corporate bonds to be sold overseas in bearer form. In addition, the Treasury must decide how strict to be in requiring bondholders who do not pay withholding tax to demonstrate that they are not U.S. residents. A strict ruling might force investors to compromise their anonymity and thus drive away some Europeans from U.S. issues.

Another question is whether the new U.S. regulations will allow banks to repackage Treasury bonds in bearer form for sale to overseas investors. Some members of Congress contend that these issues too could encourage tax evasion. The Senate passed a resolution Friday against such repackaging; though the resolu-tion is not binding on the Treasury, it is likely to influence the, Treasury's thinking on the issue. Meanwhile, Representative Pete Stark, a California Democrat, introduced a bill to prevent resale of government bonds in bearer form.

To quell confusion in the bond market, Mr. Regan issued a statement late Friday saying that the Senate action should have no effect on issues already announced. He also said the Treasury (Confirmed on Page 11, Col. 4)

Newark is the home airport for People Express, which announced its intention to compete in the New York-Chicago market last week. The announcement triggered a drop in airline stocks reflecting investor concern over possibility of a new national fare-cutting war. American's offer applies only to people who buy their tickets at least seven days in advance, pur-chase roundtrip fares and stay at their destination through Saturday nights.

The airline's unrestricted fares for the Newark-Chicago route also will be cut, to $89 from $258 one-flights a day each way on the route. American also lowered its fares between other metropolitan New York airports and Chicago.

The airline's 15 daily flights between LaGuardia Airport and Chicago will be offered at $69 off-peak and $89 peak for advanced purchases and $109-$129 for unrestricted one-way fares.
American said it will make similar cuts in fares between Chicago and seven other points - Buffalo, Syracuse, Boston, Hartford-Springfield, Baltimore-Washington and National and Dulles airports in Washington.

People Express' fares on its new nonstop, roundtrip flights on the route between Chicago's O'Hare airport and Newark airport will be $79 one-way during peak business hours and $59 one-way at other times. The fares have no restric-tions, but do not include "extras" like baggage handling.

The Chicago-New York as route is one of the busiest in the country, serving an estimated 12,000 passengers each day. Most

Move Called A 'Milestone'

By Thomas C. Hayes New York Times Service

LOS ANGELES — International Business Machines Corp. is exected to introduce on Tuesday a high-powered successor to its three-year-old Personal Computer before 1,500 computer dealers, according to software writers and in-dustry analysts invited to Dallas for the occasion.

"This is a milestone, the same as the launch of the original PC was a milestone," said David Lawrence, an analyst with Montgomery Secu-rities in San Francisco. "A very different industry will come out of IBM never discusses projects be-fore they are introduced. Analysts are divided over exactly what IBM is likely to introduce, but most agree that it will be a faster, more versatile computer, able to link with IBM PCs already in place.

A party in Dallas marking the third anniversary of the PC's intro-duction is aimed at dealers, ana-lysts and software publishers in the personal computer industry. A meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, followed by a technical session Wednesday. There is also to be a meeting Tuesday in New York for office systems consultants and ana-

Japan Is Only Starting to Adopt Its Own High-Tech Automation

By Andrew Pollack

TOKYO — Japanese companies, though strong in making computers and telephone systems, are only beginning to link the systems together for maximum use, as advanced companies in the United States have done.

One example of Japan's push toward automa-tion is the change developing at the Tokyo Stock Exchange. On its cavernous floor, hundreds of men in white shirts clap and flash hand signals to their colleagues and elbow their way to the trading tables, 14 huge U-shaped counters where specialists frantically record transactions with pencil and paper and calculate with abacuses.

Such practices, little altered in more than 100 years, will soon fade into the past, however. The future can be seen one floor below, where 430 less popular stocks are traded. In this room, 24 men stare at computer terminals, occasionally pushing a key to execute a trade. It is so quiet that some of the men doze. The only thing this room has in common with the other is the white shirts.

There are exceptions, of course, but in general Japanese offices are not nearly as automated as those in the United States. Computer data banks, which proliferate in the United States, are hardly in use in Japan. Neither are cable television, home electronic information systems or teleconferenc-

Japan is rapidly attempting to correct the situation by developing advanced data communications networks and by trying to end regulations that have restricted such networks' development. How well the Japanese succeed will be important for their computer and communications in-dustries, but even more so for their service industries. Japan has a trade deficit in services, in contrast to its huge surplus in merchandise. Moreover, Japan is moving into an age in which the flow of information is becoming as important as the flow of goods. Service-sector workers accounted for $4.5 percent of the work force in 1982, up from 47.3 percent in 1970. For Japan to function as a financial and commercial center for the Far East, advanced computer and communications networks are needed. Such equipment is also needed by the country's financial institutions and other service industries to stay The recent liberalization of Japanese financial BONN — The United States is becoming embroiled with Europe-an governments over exports of advanced technology to Communist countries in Eastern Europe.

The strains come only weeks af-ter 14 members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and Japan agreed in Paris to impose broad new controls on exports of ad-vanced technology items deemed useful to the Soviet military.

European concern focuses on growing indications that the Unit-ed States is considering tighter safeguards against technology transfers to the Soviet bloc, including information relating to consumer products, such as small com-puters or telephone systems, as well as military technology.

Officials are worried about the effects of such restrictions on small companies that rely on exports to the Soviet bloc, as well as on industrial innovation, particularly in areas such as microelectronics and space research.

Some European officials fear that the U.S. effort could provoke the most serious strain in trade relations between Washington and its European allies since the United States attempted to stop sales of equipment for the Siberian gas

On Wednesday, West Germany's new economics minister, Martin Bangemann, warned Washington that Bonn would "not tolerate" further attempts to restrict technology transfers, and would, if necessary, legally prohibit its companies from complying with "extraterritorial" trade restrictions imposed by a foreign nation.

Austria said, meanwhile, that it would resist U.S. pressure to adopt export curbs on advanced technol-

Noting Austria's political neu-trality, aides to Prime Minister Fred Sinowatz said the country was unable to agree to controls sought by the United States on freight and other equipment brought into Aus-tria under bulk distribution licenses. Washington says uncon-trolled shipments through Austria allow advanced-technology items to be transferred illegally to East bloc countries with impunity.

"The United States is waging economic war with all the means at its disposal," the newspaper said.
And in Belgium, U.S. attempts to prevent the sale of a Belgian-made, computer-controlled lathe to the Soviet Union recently caused a government crisis, with political and business leaders in the depressed region of Wallonia, where the machine's maker is located, accusing the government in Brussels of damaging the economy by acceding to U.S. demands.

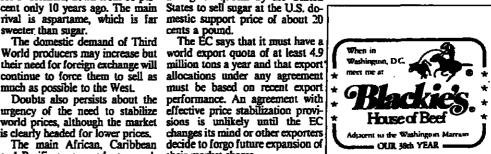

Belgian government officials said Thursday that the United States had agreed to pay $700,000 of the unit's $1.8-million cost. The lathe will now go to the Belgian Army instead of the Soviet Union. Belgian officials also said the United States would help restructure Pegard SA, the lathe's maker.

Eastern Air Seeks Joint Scheduling to Curb Delays

By Lee A. Daniels New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Eastern Air Lines has asked the Civil Aeronauties Board to permit airlines to jointly revise their schedules to reduce flight delays that have plagued carriers and passengers

In its petition Friday, the Miamibased airline said that congestion at certain airports was threatening the U.S. air transport system and demanded the quick, short-term solution that it said voluntary rescheduling by the airlines could

Eastern petitioned the CAB because the carriers could not discuss revising their schedules unless the federal agency granted them temporary immunity from the antitrust

The Eastern proposal came as legislation was being prepared in Congress that would authorize the Federal Aviation Administration to impose order on airline schedules to relieve the growing incidence of flight delays.

Reaction to both proposals ranged from cool to hostile among several airlines questioned Friday. Spokesmen contended that such steps were unnecessary and, if taken, would constitute a partial repeal of the airline deregulation law.

Pressure has been growing for Italy's $500-million issue, the the government to address the first sold directly by the republic problem of flight delays as they seemingly have become routine at some of the nation's more heavily rather than through a state agency, traded strongly, ending the week at traveled airports.

According to data gathered by the FAA, flight delays for the first six months of this year rose 73 percent from a year earlier, to 189,473, out of about four million flights.

AUDEN IN LOVE

ONE has to be at least a little suspicious at first of Dorothy J. Farnan's ultimately fascinating "Auden in Love," an account of the English poet's lifelong love affair with a writer from Brooklyn named Chester Kallman, After all the celts. all, the author, a retired high-school English teacher, seems doubly disqualified to describe such a delicate relationship.

First, there is her background as an Irish Catholic from Winona, Minnesota, who attended the University of Michigan and ended her teaching career as chairman of the English department at Erasmus High School in Brooklyn. Then there is her complex relationship to Auden. She first met him at Ann Arbor in 1943, when she fell in with a student crowd that included Chester Kallman. She got to know him better when she arrived in New York City with another young woman from the Middle West, and all but formed a menage a trois with Kallman. And she got to know him best of all when she ended up marrying Kallman's father, Edward, a dentist who shared, among other things, her interest in painting.

In short, had Auden been able to legalize what he regarded as his marriage to Chester Kallman, then one could almost have said of Dorothy Farnan that she began as Auden's student, continued as his rival and ended up his stepmother-in-law. It is not exactly the background for an objective view of her sub-

All the same, Farnan delivers what she promises. She persuades us that when Auden first met Kallman in New York in 1939, he fell in love for the first time, and for always. She convinces us that though Kallman betrayed Auden for another lover two years later thereby provoking Auden to murderous rage and permanently ending their physical relationship — Wystan, as she calls him throughout, was still willing to give up cros and settle permanently for agape, or spiritual love. She leaves us with little doubt that though Kallman. strained that love increasingly with his promiscuous and romantic nature, he remained the constant in Auden's life and permitted him to realize, as he put it in a letter to Kallman, "all that love is intended to be."

In the process, she provides a touching and often comic portrait of Auden, as well as of his lover, who resembles remarkably the poet Delmore Schwartz and of whom it can be said that if Schwartz was the ne plus ultra of self-de-structiveness, then Chester Kallman was a selfdestructive Delmore Schwartz.

Her claims for Auden's estimate of her are modest, to say the least. She writes that he resented what he saw as her rivalry: at Ann Arbor, he put a curse on her (which, being "Irish and superstitious," she took seriously); in New York he suffered her presence with the monumental silences that became part of his legend.

What she doesn't say is that in time he grew fond of her. Yet the evidence is everywhere in her book — in her lively descriptions of his habits and appearance, in the funny stories she tells about how he counseled her to run her English department and allowed her to let her teachers and students come calling, and in the intimacy with which she came to understand

But she makes her case, and she does so with eloquence and humor. The letter she discovered from Auden to Kallman dated "Christ-mas Day, 1941," is by itself a moving document. "Dearest Chester," it begins. "Because it is in you, a Jew, that I, a Gentile inheriting an O-so-genteel anti-Semitism, have found my happiness: As this morning I think of Bethlehem. I think of you."

"Because our love, beginning Hans Ander-sen, became Grimm," the letter closes, "and there are probably grimmer tests to come, nevertheless I believe that if only we have faith in God and in each other, we shall be permitted to realize all that love is intended to be. This would have been enough to make her case. Yet she has done much more. Christopher Lehmann-Haupt is on the staff of The recently upgraded PCjr, a portable that runs many programs created for the PC, is hurting PC sales at the low end of the market, said Alan G. Steel, an analyst with the Yankee Group consultants in Boston. "This new computer squeezes the PC from the high end," he added.

By most accounts, the computer will be based on a 80286 microprocessor developed by Intel Corp. and licensed to IBM. It is unclear whether IBM or Intel would make the microprocessor initially.

The 286, as it is called, lets the computer conduct several tasks at once. The inititiuser, multitask ability means the computer could link microcomputers built around the Intel 8088, which IBM used in Several factors have hindered development of automated communi cations networks in Japan. One is that the Japanese have tended to stress development of individual pieces of equipment but have been weak in organizing them into com-plex systems and in writing the software to run them.

Another factor has been strict gulation, which has thwarted use of advanced technologies. For example, the phone company is a monopoly, which prevents entrepreneurial companies from setting up advanced computer-communication systems.

Similarly, although the automated teller machines in Japan are far more sophisticated than those in the United States, regulations prohibit them from operating after 6 P.M. # The Value of Principles

By William Safire
WASHINGTON — "Words
are the tokens current and accepted for conceits," wrote Francis Bacon almost four centuries ago,

"as moneys are for values." Since Bacon's time, two of those words have added to their meanings. Conceit, in the singular, now is most often taken to mean "unwarranted pride" rather than "idea." And the word values, in the plural, is no longer limited to material worth. The word values has become the all-embracing vogue term for God and country," the work ethic, respect for family, coming to the dinner table with your hair slicked down and your mouth watering for apple pie with a slice of very Amer-

Only a few years ago, principles were the big thing in politics; lately, that word has been shunted aside for values, usually modified as family values. The phrase traditional values is also used, by people who probably mean historical values. What happened in American life that replaced principles with values? What's the difference between the two words? At the beginning was the principle: The Latin principium meant "source, origin, beginning." That came to mean a primary truth that formed the basis for other beliefs and then to mean a rule for ethical conduct.

Not so with values. Rooted in the Latin word for "strength." the plural meant what Bacon used it to mean: material worth. It gradually came to acquire a meaning of in-trinsic worth. Then, about 50 years ago, psychologists and sociologists lommed on to the word and made t their own, until politicians came along recently to adopt their mean-in this sociopolitical meaning, values are neither standards of intrinsic worth nor eternal verities. They are relative, not universal: Sociologists used the term to describe the behavior that is accepted by consensus. These values are emphasized within the society and become central to each member's social acceptance: For Titanic passengers, "women and children first" was a value, while among some aborigines, "kill only what you need to eat" is a value.

Values can change but principles do not. David Guralnik, editor of Webster's New World Dictionary, explains: "Principles, being theological in origin, are fixed, invariable, absolute, eternal. Values, being in a sense scientific, are nontheological and therefore subject to change and alteration as the demands and needs of a society

The value system of one society puts a high worth on work; another society may think of work as an unfortunate necessity and put a higher worth on the contemplative life or chasing around.

Principles are what you stand for in life; values are what you stand around in among your friends. Principles are stern and unyielding; values are warm and supportive. The fact that principles are out and values are in says a lot about politics in both parties today.

ISN'T the Olympiad the years between the Olympic Games?" asks Michael Antebi of Brooklyn. "If so, there are millions of coins with the error engraved on them." The original meaning of Olympiad is "the time between Olympic games" and, in this sense, an Olympiad would be equivalent to a United States presidential term. But most people, and all television announcers, take the Olympiad to mean "the quadrennial celebra-tion," a meaning that has a lineage of five centuries. This newer meaning gets the gold medal.

The organizers of the 1984 games pushed an odd amalgam of Roman numerals and English words in styling their event "the XXIIIrd

Sports columnist Dave Anderson of The New York Times reacted: "Notice that the organizers have added a blob of California culture, putting 'rd' after Roman numerals. That's like putting guacamole on pizza. In L.A., you can get guacamole on pizza."

The New York Times style is "the XXIII Olympiad," which is an improvement over the nerd's rd but is not a complete representation of the spoken term. Upon deliberation, I would write "Olympiad XXIII," in the style of the Super Bowls, or "the Twenty-Third Olympiad," or "the 23d Olympi-Who ever heard of the XXIIIrd Psalm? Or the XXIII

The Louvre's Past

By Clare Hargreaves Reuters

Paris — The plan to build a glass pyramid outside the imposing classical facade of the Louvre museum has given archaeologists a chance to examine 13 centuries of Paris history.

Remains of an area once filled with aristocratic mansions and a web of shop-filled streets have been uncovered during work on the foundation for the pyramid. In two years, when the treasures from the site on the Cour Napoléon have been removed and studied, what is left of the excavation will be destroyed to make way for the controversial pyramid, which was designed by architect LM. Pei.

Since March, a team of archaeologists — 53 professionals, 20 diggers and 50 volunteers — have been working to get a look at the area's turbulent past.

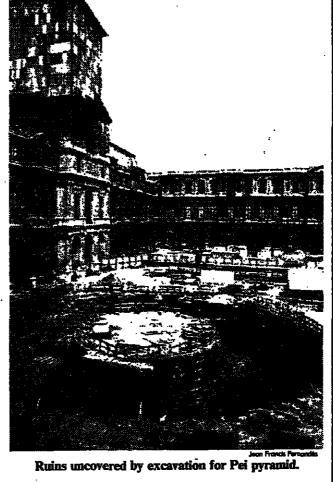

Work is also being done on a separate site in the Cour Carrée. but here the ruins will be converted into an underground museum. Tourists will be able to go inside the dungeons of the city fortress built by King Philippe Auguste in 1190 and converted into a palace by Charles V nearly two centuries

Behind bright, graffiti-covered boards surrounding the Cour Napoléon site, excavators have uncovered an area they say was sparsely populated farmland under Philippe Auguste. In the 12th and 13th centuries a looked onto a meat market on the blue and white porcelain from the edge of the Seine. There was a menagerie for wild animals, the castle kitchens and a street for prostitutes frequented by the castle garrison.

The conversion of the fortress into a palace by Charles V meant little change in the area's roughand-tumble image.

Although François I managed to get rid of what he called the "evil houses," it was not until the rule of Napoléon III in the second half of the 19th century that the buildings in the area were demolished and the site paved

The excavators' discoveries included a collection of 500 pipes carved in the shapes of heads of contemporary figures, which presumably belonged to a pipe shop. From the 15th century onwards a number of aristocratic families seem to have moved in.

Although some archaeologists on the Cour Napoléon regret that their excavations are to be covered over for the pyramid, others like Yves de Kisch, director of operations, take a more pragmat-ic approach. He said that if it had not been for the pyramid project the 15 million francs (about $1.7 million) given annually by the French government for excavations in the Cour Napoléon would never have been allotCONCORD POSTCARD

Hunting Goes High-Tech

By Joe Magruder

ONCORD, New Hampshire — Bear hunting in these parts has gone high-tech, and some local sportsmen are up in arms about it. They say it's unfair to the bear.

The use of radio transmitters on hunting dogs, the pre-season training of dogs in mock hunts, and an upswing in use of hired guides have combined to produce "a beareradication program," according to Gary Crockett, a land trader and commercial hunting guide. "They go riding around with the dogs in their four-wheel-drive pickups, talk on their CB radios, use the radio collars on their dogs. Sometimes they have two sets of dogs."

When the pursued bear climbs a tree, the hunter — the guide's client — shoots it. "Where's the sport?" asks Crockett.

That question is being echoed by others as New Hampshire hunters prepare for the the 1984 scason, which runs Sept. I through Dec. 2.

Captain Henry Mock, assistant law enforcement chief for the Fish and Game Department, says the uproar has convinced many bear hunters they have to control their sport or lose it. Last month, the New Hampshire Bear Hunters' Association said it would support bans on commercial guiding for bears, as well as the training of dogs in the spring, when the bears have just finished hibernating and young cubs are in the woods.

The department is reviewing the proposals. But Mock says even if the proposals satisfy the department, they may not satisfy such critics as Crockett.

These people, they're all hunters. Their qualms are, you're supposed to go out hunting using your instincts and your eyes and your nose," Mock says. "When you go out there with electronic devices, it becomes a moral issue. The bear can't compete."

Last year, hunters in the state killed 251 black bears, the most common species in North America.

Many of these hunters concede that reforms are needed, but defend the use of radio collars. Harrie Ashley, president of the hunters' association, says it is years of train- Scarlet Lener," may have been poiing, not radio collars, that enable hunting dogs to tree a bear. Such arguments haven't swayed officials in Pittsburg, Crockett's hometown, or four neighboring towns. Midway through last fail's hunting season, they asked for an emergency ban on bear hunting with dogs. "The majority of the undersigned have been hunters, fishermen or trappers most of their 1 hot 215 lives," they wrote. "All of us feel strongly that the use of modern radio technology with dog packs in bear hunting should be permanently prohibited by law."

Fish and Game Department officials denied the request, saying there was no emergency. Two months later, the protest broad-

"We, the undersigned, as landowners and sportsmen, would like to express our growing concern about the increasing use of radio-assisted, bear-hunting dogs and the excesses committed by the socalled 'guides' who release them," Crockett and other landowners said in a petition last December.

"The practice of hunting bear with dogs should be abolished," the petitioners said. "We have, therefore, decided to post our property unless some action is taken, and will encourage our neighbors to fol-

Mock personally believes that commercialization, not radio collars, are the root of the problem. Bear hunting has become a very lucrative venture," he says, with guides earning up to $1,500 per trip plus money from selling teeth, claws and other bear parts.
